MILITARY LAW AND ITS TRIBUNALS

BY
COLONEL JOHN I. ROGERS
Former Judge Advocate General of National Guard of Pennsylvania

The creation and government of the tribunals referred to in the Lieber Code were and are prescribed in the Army Regulations and Articles of War, modified from time to time by Congress. It would be idle at this late day to discuss the Acts and Decrees of the various courts martial, military boards and commissions that sat at various times during the Rebellion and subsequently during the reconstruction period. The Act of March 3, 1863, armed the President and the officers under him with dictatorial power to deprive any man, whom they regarded an inimical to the Union cause, of his liberty and property, and the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the Act by a long line of cases, beginning with Beard v. Burts, 5 Otto 438, as practically establishing martial law over entire disaffected districts, and therefore enforceable as a war measure.

Looking through twentieth century spectacles, it is difficult to realize that four years afterward—being two years after the disappearance of every hostile combatant—the same highest court of the land upheld the Reconstruction Acts of 1867, as a continuance of the martial law power, sustainable on the constitutional plea, that Congress must guarantee to every State a republican form of government. This was certainly the upraising of the military above the civil authorities. The blindfolded goddess dropped her bandage and her equipose scales and Minervalike, carved justice with a sword. The judge advocate, and not the judge defined and promulgated decrees affecting life, liberty and property. If a court were open for business, it was not as of right but by the permit of a provost marshal.

But happily all this is long in the past. Relief from soldier law came slowly, but it came. Time, which assuages everything, gradually dissipated rancor, prejudice and misunderstanding, and the better spirits of our nature whispered peace and reconciliation. Congress felt its influences and a new dispensation was enacted. The Supreme Court, as voiced by that great jurist, Judge Samuel F. Miller, cried a halt, and said "the pendulum had swung too far in one direction," and the return swing must begin. Military tribunals ceased to try civilians in times of peace and confined their labors to the discipline of soldiers and camp followers, and became again the dutiful servants of the civil law paramount. And as peace is, or ought to be, the normal condition of every civilized nation and to secure its blessings is, or ought to be, the real object of all wars and all armies, we can skip over the many miscarriages of justice during those troublous times and confine our further consideration to the military law that governs the United States Army and its reserve, the uniformed militia of the States and the tribunals that enforce its mandates and disciplines its delinquents.

Freemen everywhere, whether subjects or citizens, have ever been jealous and suspicious of the slightest encroachment on the civilian's immunity from arrest or trial by military officers or tribunals in times of peace. From the earliest days of English history the application of the King's army regulations was held strictly and exclusively to soldiers. There was then no standing army. Sixty thousand knights were bound by freehold tenures to bring their retainers into the field upon the sovereign's call to arms. Sir Matthew Hale, in referring to the rules governing such forces when in actual service, termed those rules martial law, and said: "That in truth and reality it is not a law, but something indulged rather than allowed as law; the necessity of good order and discipline in an army is that only which gives these laws a continuance." The extension of the jurisdiction of military commissions to certain favorites of the crown by Charles the First to try and punish civilians raised such a vigorous opposition that he was compelled to grant the Great Petition of Right (or second Magna Charta, as it is often called) and thereafter the exercise of martial law in times of peace was interdicted.

As inheritors of English liberty, the framers of our Federal Constitution took care to prescribe that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment by a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war." The same Constitution also provides for calling forth the militia "to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States." It is needless to add that the Constitution of Pennsylvania practically repeats the same provisions, and in Section 22 prescribes that "the military shall in all cases and at all times be in strict subordination to the civil power."

The military jurisprudence of the United States Army is made up of the "Articles of War," the Acts of Congress pertinent thereto, the Army Regulations, the decisions of the Federal Courts, the Orders of the President and Secretary of War, the opinions of the Attorney General and of the Judge Advocate General, and the rulings of other officers clothed with authority for their interpretation. With so many disconnected links and sources of authority it is not surprising to learn that their numerous defects, omissions, inconsistencies and anachronisms have at all times perplexed and confused the officials of the Judge Advocate General's Department, as well as the tribunals convened thereunder, and have hampered the administration of justice, causing frequent mistrials and consequent loss of discipline to the army. New legislation, looking to revision, simplification and consolidation of such jurisprudence, has been recommended by almost all the officers of the Department of Military Justice in their annual reports, but with the exception of a few changes in the organization and jurisdiction of military courts, no attention has been paid thereto. Some years ago one of the departmental Judge Advocates called attention to the fact that the governing Articles of War were enacted early in the nineteenth century—now nearly one hundred years ago—and some of them were as obsolete and antiquated as the chapter on the militia, which still requires that every citizen enrolled therein " shall be constantly provided with two spare flints for his firelock."

The court of highest dignity and jurisdiction is known as the General Court, which is convenable by a commanding officer and consists of not less than five nor more than thirteen officers. The detail of its members includes always the designation of a judge advocate, who is the law adviser of the court, besides occupying the anomalous position of prosecuting attorney and, at the same time, counsel for the defendant, The judge advocate subpoenas the witnesses for both sides and, in fact, directs the entire proceedings, subject to the rulings of the court. Rules of Evidence are supposed to follow those of the civil courts. The records of the proceedings are models of their class and are always neatly engrossed, endorsed and filed for future reference.

The inferior tribunals for the trial of enlisted men were the "Regimental or Garrison Court," and in time of war, until recently, the "Field Officer Court." Their names imply their jurisdictions. It is unnecessary now to refer further to those tribunals, because, a few years ago they were practically legislated out of existence and what is known as the "Summary Courts" substituted in lieu thereof. Each consists of one officer, usually the second in command, convened by the commanding officer of a garrison, post, regiment, battalion, company or other detachment of troops. The trial must begin within twenty-four hours of the arrest, unless the accused demands, as of right, a trial before a Regimental Court. These courts are in almost continuous session. They sit from day to day, disposing of the business brought before them, at or near the places where the offences or delinquencies are alleged to have occurred. Their speedy hearings have given them deserved popularity, and the energetic and persistent efforts of the Judge Advocate General and his subordinates, some of them trained lawyers and authors of elaborate text-books and commentaries on military jurisprudence, so zealously utilizes them, that 15,140 trials were held therein during the first year of their existence. This report shows not necessarily an increase in the number of offences, but rather that all derelictions instead of some being overlooked, as formerly, to avoid the cumbersome machinery of Garrison Courts, were promptly investigated and punished by the new tribunals. The only inconvenience that arose from so many trials by so many courts, in such widely separated territory, was the lack of uniformity in sentences for similar misdemeanors. To remedy this, the President, by authority of a special enactment, issued a General Order February 27, 1891, defining and prescribing the maximum punishments for the most usual offences of enlisted men, as administered by "Summary Courts." The result, in the language of the Judge Advocate General, "has given much satisfaction and greatly promoted discipline." "Soldiers believe that they are now tried with fairness and humanity, their punishments not depending on the caprice of each officer constituting a 'Summary Court,' but limited by executive clemency. No one can now doubt that the whole system is a rational and humane change from a conception of military punishment, which the country and age had outgrown. It has gone into effect so quietly—there was so little friction even in the starting of the machinery—that it has not attracted much attention, yet it marks a most important era in the history of the administration of military justice in the American army."

This grateful and enthusiastic language, for so small a concession to the many righteous demands of the Department of Military Justice, must not mislead us into the belief that those energetic officials will rest contentedly with the modicum of progress thus accomplished. The loosely constructed system of jurisprudence made up of the various "Articles of War," Army Regulations, etc., already enumerated, still clogs and hampers the administration of justice, but to the credit of the department officials, they peg away with undiminished ardor and do not permit their antique machinery to inactively rust, but keep it in endless operation, thus upholding the majesty of vindicated law.

So much for the Military Law in the United States Army, which is always in camp or at post, and therefore capable of enforcing the decrees of its tribunals by the strong arm of military power.

But as to the uniformed part of the militia, or the National Guard of the different States, there is quite a different environment, and consequently needing somewhat different laws and processes to enforce them.

The National Guard of a State, on its peace footing, and when not engaged in assisting the civil authorities in putting down riots and protecting property from mob spoliation, has only its weekly drills, occasional parades, inspections, reviews and en eight days' annual encampment. During the remaining days and nights of the year its personnel is engaged in professional, commercial, mechanical or agricultural pursuits. It is manifest, therefore, that it cannot be governed and disciplined by the same rules that regulate our National army, constantly in field or garrison.

COLONEL EDWARD DE VAUX MORRELL, 3d REGT., N. G. P.

The subject of our sketch, Edward Morrell, of Torresdale, Philadelphia, was born at Newport, R. I., on August 7th, 1862, while his parents were sojourning at that resort. His ancestors were old time Philadelphians and were always prominent in the history of this City, and though it was his misfortune to be born outside its borders, he has striven—and continues—to make amends therefor by demonstrating that, in all things, he first is an American, after which he is intensely a Philadelphian. His earlier education was received at the hands of Philadelphians, and when he chose a university, unlike many of his boyhood companions, he insisted on going to a Philadelphia institution, the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he graduated from the Department of Arts in 1885, with high honors. He also studied law at the same institution and received the degrees of M. A. and LL. B. in 1887; was selected to deliver the oration at the commencement, and was admitted to the Bar of this City in the same year, having taken the examination of the Board of Examiners six months prior to his graduation from the University. For some time he had charge of part of the practice of his step-father, John G. Johnson, than whom the bar of Philadelphia has no abler exponent.

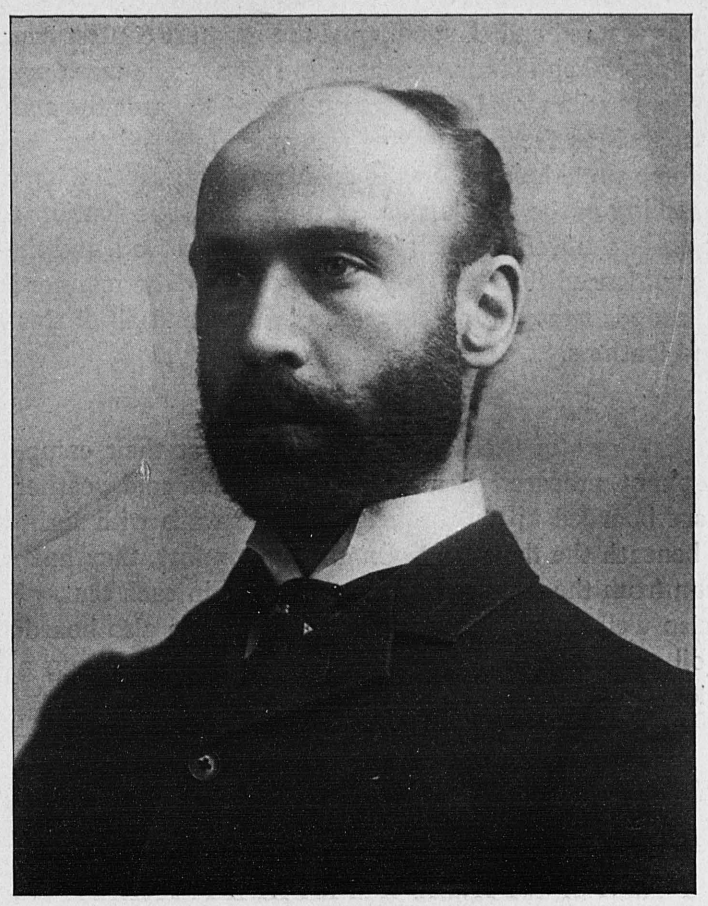
In 1889, he married Louise Bouvier Drexel, the youngest daughter of the late Francis A. Drexel, one of the greatest financiers of our great City, whose name will ever be identified with many of our prominent charitable and educational institutions. To these, Colonel Morrell has devoted a great deal of his time and attention, and the management of them he has made a labor of love.

In 1891, he was elected to Select Council as the representative of the Thirty-fifth Ward, which has since been divided into two Wards, and from that time he has been instrumental in having miles of macadamized roads constructed, new streets opened, sewers laid, electric lighting introduced, and other improvements made. He declined a renomination, as he felt there were others who would continue the work he had laid down, and about this time entered another field.

The then Governor of Pennsylvania (Hon. R. E. Pattison) commissioned him as Colonel of the Third Regiment, N. G. P., in February, 1893. The regiment was in such a run down condition that its disbandment had been practically decided upon, but Colonel Morrell energetically started to work, practically reorganizing the regiment, and when it appeared at its next summer encampment at Torresdale, the public was amazed that such a decided improvement could have been brought about in the space of a few months. For full two years he continued at the work, spending night after night at the armory, at the end of which time the regiment had been brought up to a position that reflected honor not only on the City of Philadelphia, but upon the National Guard at large.

Having proved his ability in this field, he was called upon and commissioned by Governor Hastings as the Inspector General of the National Guard, to the duties of which he devoted himself with the same enthusiasm he displayed in other directions, looking not only to the good of the Guard itself but to the better care and comfort of the enlisted man. For years it had been the custom to compel regiments to undergo inspection of clothing and equipments under a broiling sun at the summer encampments, each man standing weighted down with knapsack, blanket, overcoat, etc., in heavy marching order, and not infrequently dozens were carried off the field from exhaustion. The elimination of such conditions was his first aim, realizing as he did, that equipments could be as well inspected in quarters, and that the men could display their military proficiency as well, if not better, in light marching order. Such an innovation as this was a God-send to the enlisted man, and to this day the reform has been maintained. Again at Mt. Gretna, when the entire service was awaiting admission to the Volunteer service of the United States, when there were hundreds of citizens awaiting enrollment in the United States service, for whom no provision had been made by either the National Guard or the U. S. Government, he solved the dilemma by holding himself personally responsible for all the expenses incurred for rations, and for the return of all State property issued. It was such service as this that endeared him to the entire National Guard, and when the Governor commissioned him as the Brigadier General of the First Brigade, many a prayer went up from the hundreds of men awaiting a second call to the front that such a man as Colonel Morrell might be commissioned as their leader.

Since that time Colonel Morrell has been elected to Congress, having been chosen to fill the vacancy in the Fifty-sixth Congress caused by the death of the late beloved Alfred C. Harmer, and for the full term of the Fifty-seventh Congress. He has ever proved himself ready and willing to do all in his power, or make any sacrifice, for the betterment of his district or for the interest of any individual living within its borders.



COLONEL THOS. J. KEENAN

ALLEGHENY COUNTY N. G. P., CHAMPIONSHIP MEDAL

The medal is offered for the annual competition by the officers and enlisted men of the National Guard Organization of Allegheny County. Contestants must have been members of the organization which they represent at least four months prior to the date of each contest.

The winner of each annual contest shall have the privilege of wearing the medal until one week prior to the next annual contest, provided he becomes personally responsible for the loss of the medal during the time it is in his possession.

The medal shall become the personal property of any contestant making the highest score in three of the annual contests.

Each contestant shall have ten shots at two hundred and five hundred yards.

No sighting or warming shots will be allowed, and any contestant practicing on the range over which the contest takes place on the day of the contest shall be disqualified.

The regulation infantry arm of the National Guard of Pennsylvania shall be used, and the face of the target must be identical with that used on the State range at Mount Gretna.

A trigger pull of not less than six pounds will be required. To guard against violation of this rule the officer in charge of the match will have a six pound weight at the two hundred and five hundred firing points, and shall personally test the gun of each contestant.

No coaching as to windage and elevation will be permitted, but each organization competing may have a spotter to inform contestants where their bullets strike the target.

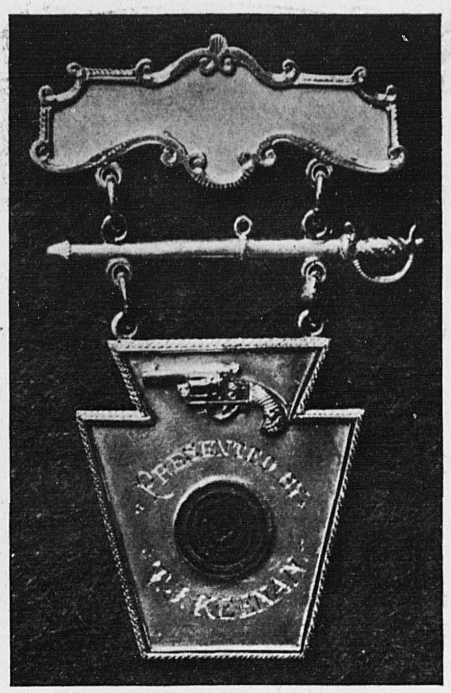
Throughout the contest contestants (except when firing) and spectators must remain at a distance of at least five yards back of the firing line, and no conversation or remarks intended to annoy the shooter shall be permitted.

The conditions of the contest not specified herein shall be as far as applicable those governing the State team matches at Mount Gretna.

One week prior to each contest the winner of the preceding contest shall place the medal in the custody of the inspector of rifle practice who is to conduct the contest.

The first annual contest shall take place on the Salt Works range on Saturday, September 28, at 1 P. M. The date of the subsequent contests shall be determined by the inspector of rifle practice of the organization winning the medal at the preceding contest.

Inspectors of rifle practice of competing organizations may arrange additional rules for each contest providing the same do not conflict with those herein specified.



KEENAN TROPHIES

EIGHTEENTH REGIMENT REVOLVER MEDAL

The medal is donated by T. J. Keenan to the Eighteenth Regiment for annual competition among the commissioned officers of that organization.

The date of each contest shall be decided by the Regimental Inspector of Rifle Practice.

The winner of each contest shall have the privilege of wearing the medal until the date of the succeeding annual contest, providing he becomes personally responsible for the loss of the medal while it is in his possession.

The medal will become the personal property of any officer who makes the highest score in three successive contests.

The contestants shall use the regulation revolver of the National Guard of Pennsylvania, and shall fire six shots each at twenty-five, fifty and seventy-five yards. The six shots at each range must be fired in one minute or less.

No sighting or warming shots will be allowed, and no previous practice on the range will be permitted by competitors on the day of the contest. The target shall be the same as that used at the State Range at Mount Gretna.

THE recent mobilization of the National Guard of Pennsylvania was an object lesson to every State in the Union which maintains a body of State troops. The lesson lay in the entire absence of excitement of any kind, although conditions were such that for the maintenance of law and order a great State had found it necessary to call into active service an army of ten thousand men. About one-third of this force was already afield when the remainder received marching orders and those orders would have been obeyed if all of the forces had been directed to assemble simultaneously, with the same calm assurance which can only obtain where the system is good and the machine perfect.

It is safe to assert that in no other State could such a mobilization have been accomplished without the affected Commonwealth being ablaze with excitement throughout its confines. Here, in Pennsylvania, the Commander-in chief touched the button and the members of the Guard did the rest. We have said that it was a perfect machine, and the perfection was apparent in that the button being touched, the chief engineers, so to speak, did not have to stand by to pour on oil, or adjust creaking parts. The machine moved at once, it moved smoothly; every subordinate knew what to do and how to do it, and each and every one connected with the Guard performed his part in a soldierlike manner.

No better exemplification of the practical value of the Pennsylvania system of training its troops could be had than that of which we write. The State's forces were so complete in organization, so fully provided with equipment, so thoroughly instructed and practiced in all that they should be, that there was scarcely a ripple discernible.

From the time that the announcement was made that the State would exert its mighty power to maintain its name and reputation, as a law abiding community, by the assembling of its soldiers as the final arbitrament in the clash impending, from that very moment peace was assured and the ending of the greatest contest ever known between capital and labor, appeared in sight. The mere presence of the soldiers had a moral effect which tended towards the end. Lawlessness, such as there had been was at end. And then beside the moral force there loomed up the cold, matter-of-fact military aspect. The handling of the division was of the best. The districts to be occupied had been well studied, the terrene understood, and the trained officers evidenced their military intelligence by the manner in which all the proper strategic points were covered, and all of this without fuss and feathers.

THE officers of the Thirteenth Infantry at their camp, at Olyphant, prepared themselves for a siege of cold weather. Their tents are boarded up to the height of the walls with tight wooden doors beneath the flaps, and, for further comfort, they had a steam-pipe run from the nearby colliery and a coil in each tent. The men were also well taken care of. Their tents were also boarded and a small oil stove was placed in each, making matters snug and comfortable.

BY the time this issue of "Our State Army and Navy" is laid before its readers, a momentous question will have been decided. The right of the civil authorities to arrest a soldier who kills a citizen, while he, the soldier, is in the strict performance of his duty, will have been passed upon. The State authorities take the ground that the soldier is not amenable to arrest and at this writing the legal department of the Guard, re-inforced by the Attorney General of the Commonwealth, is batling to maintain that point. If a soldier on duty in times of tumult, riot and insurrection is given instructions to shoot in certain exigencies, and obeys his orders to the letter, in a careful and soldierlike manner, and if his obedience to such orders causes him to take a life, the arresting of that soldier by the civil authorities, under indictment for murder, or manslaughter, or homicide, would cause the demoralization of the whole body martial.

Personal Mention

Captain Fred. R. Drake, A. D. C., is acting Quartermaster of the Third Brigade during the absence of Major Nichols.

First Sergeant George B. Konkle has been elected second lieutenant of Company D, Twelfth Regiment, vice Graves, resigned, at Shenandoah.

Colonel Barnett organized a flying squadron at Shamokin. He equipped a squad as cavalry and sent it out daily on the horses of the field and staff to patrol.

Colonel C. Bow Dougherty placed a big search light on an elevated position in his camp and each night had its powerful beams searching the surrounding country for men who had no business there.

NOTES

The Thirteenth Regiment has established a record for itself at Olyphant, where it, on frequent occasions, captured ammunition, dynamite and powder from the rioters.

All of the organizations comprising the Third Brigade established rifle ranges and completed the work of qualifying their men as marksmen during their tour of duty in the coal regions. In some instances whole companies were qualified.

After seeing the Governor's Troop while on a tour of inspection of the camps in the coal regions, Lieutenant Colonel Penney, Division Inspector, said: "They looked like veterans, and were typical cavalrymen of the best class. It is a matter of astonishment to me that with such poor armory facilities such a good troop can be made."

The Second Troop, Philadelphia City Cavalry, which has been attached to the Third Brigade during the riot duty in the coal regions, has made for itself an excellent record as thorough soldiers. Both at Shenandoah and Wilkesbarre the soldierly qualities of this troop won the commendation of the brigade commander and of the infa organizations with which they operated.

The detaching of two companies of the Fourth Regiment for duty with the Eighth under the first call for troops at Shenandoah gave rise to much uneasiness in the Fourth as to whether or not it foreshadowed a reorganization. When the Fourth took the field, however, these companies were returned to their own regiment.

The Commissary Department of the Third Brigade, under Major Simon B. Cameron and Commissary Sergeant Charles H. Bernheisel, was most efficient during the tour of riot duty. For three months it fed the troops without a single complaint being registered, a record to be proud of in these days.

On October 18 the officers of the Eighth Regiment elected Lieutenant Colonel Joseph B. Hutchinson colonel, Major William H. Holmes lieutenant colonel, and Captain John Owens, of Company H, major. The election was a promotion of the senior officers in each grade, and in each case was unanimous. The election was held in the field to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Colonel Theodore F. Hoffman.

The necessity for battalion hospital stewards has been demonstrated in the present tour of duty of the Guard. The battalions, and in many instances, detached posts composed of one or two companies, have little or no medical attention, except perchance a member of the command is a practitioner in private life or a student at one of the medical colleges. A young student of several years' experience would be just the person to appoint to this position and this would surely relieve considerable distress.

Obituary.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL GUARD OF PENNA.,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Harrisburg, October 12, 1902.

General Orders No. 41.

I. Announcement is hereby made of the death of Colonel Theodore F. Hoffman, commanding Eighth Regiment Infantry, National Guard of Pennsylvania, which occurred on October 11, 1902, at ten thirty-five o'clock P. M., at Scranton, Pa., while on duty with his command in obedience to the orders of the Commander-in-Chief for the purpose of suppressing industrial disturbances.

Colonel Hoffman was a faithful and respected officer of the National Guard of Pennsylvania for twenty-six years. He was commissioned Captain, Company F, Eighth Regiment Infantry, December 16, 1876; re-elected Captain, January 27, 1882; resigned May 8, 1882. Elected Major, Eighth Regiment Infantry, June 16, 1882; elected Lieutenant Colonel, same regiment, July 25, 1885; re-elected Lieutenant Colonel, Eighth Regiment Infantry, July 25, 1890, and July 25, 1895. Elected Colonel, Eighth Regiment Infantry, September 2, 1899.

Colonel Hoffman also served in the war for the suppression of the Rebellion as Private in Company D, First Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, from February 8, 1865, until the muster-out of his company,

COL. THEODORE F. HOFFMAN, EIGHTH REGIMENT

September 26, 1865.He further served his country as Colonel of the Eighth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, during the September 26, 1865. He further served his country as Colonel of the 1898, until its muster-out March 7, 1899.

Colonel Hoffman was a brave and faithful soldier, trusted by his superior officers, and respected by the men whom he commanded. In his death the National Guard of Pennsylvania loses a most valuable officer, one whose devotion to the service and whose conscientious performance of duty endeared him not only to the officers and men of his immediate command, but to the entire National Guard of Pennsylvania.

The funeral will take place at Pottsville, Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, on Wednesday afternoon, October 15, 1902, at one thirty o'clock P. M. As a mark of respect to his memory, the officers of the National Guard of Pennsylvania will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days from this date. On the day of the funeral flags on the several armories throughout the Commonwealth and at the State Arsenal will be displayed at half staff.

II. The Commanding Officer, Third Brigade, National Guard of Pennsylvania, is charged with the duty of providing proper funeral escort.
